Weird Al Yankovic, author of 'My Bologna,' a takeoff on The Knack's hit 'My Sharona,' is finalizing plans to release the campy song on the Capitol Record label.

Parking limits fixed for area near Cal Poly campus

BY KARYN HOUSTON

Daily Staff Writer

Students, staff and faculty who have become accustomed to free parking in residential areas south of campus have to park elsewhere.

According to residents of the area, the whole neighborhood got together and made a proposal to the San Luis Obispo City council to change the parking conditions in the area between Slack, Fredericks and Albert Streets.

Each resident is required to have a valid permit to park on the street between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, at a cost of $5 per permit. Two visitor permits will be available to each resident for the same price.

All cars parked without permits will be issued citations.

Seventy-five percent of the homeowners in the area signed a petition last year to change the zoning in their neighborhood. They expressed frustration and said they are fed up with an overabundance of cars parked in front of their homes.

"We have had it up to the eyeballs," said Marge Mainini, a resident on Albert Street. "We want some sanity back in our neighborhood."

The residents signing the petition cited several reasons for their action.

"First of all, the narrow streets are less than legal for parking, said Dorothy Conner of 220 Albert St. "There are no sidewalks and many small children who live in this area are endangered."

"We are tired of being a free parking lot," said Conner.

"If I were a student and I had the option to park close to school—free—I'd do it," said Mainini, "and it's not just the students. It's faculty, staff and visitors who use the racquetball and tennis courts and go jogging."

The impact of the zoning change is unknown according to Facilities Planning Director Doug Gerard.

Student's song to be national release

BY LESA PORCHE

Daily Staff Writer

"Weird" Al Yankovic, who never dreamed his song My Bologna would go any further than the ears of friends and family, is now finalizing plans with Capitol Records to have the song released as a single.

My Bologna, a spoof on The Knack's song My Sharona was originally taped in the Graphic Communications building men's room. Yankovic sent copies of the tape to KMET radio in Los Angeles.

The vice president of Artists and Repertoire at Capitol, Rupert Perry, heard the song. Perry gave copies to Knack members who liked it and he then contacted Yankovic about producing a single.

"My mouth dropped open and I almost fell to the floor," Yankovic said, "especially when I heard they want to distribute My Bologna nationwide and overseas."

The 20-year-old architecture major who is using the name "Weird Al" as his professional title, said Capitol is hyping the single as the most bizarre release ever and they are using the original recording made in the bathroom.

On the flip side is a song Yankovic wrote when he was a senior in high school called School Cafeteria. He said he tried to get someone to produce that song several years ago and no one would. So now he said the song is very special to him because Capitol wants to record it and he feels it is a sort of sweet revenge on those who said no to School Cafeteria.

Yankovic said Capitol Records accepted School Cafeteria sight unseen because they want to get the single in the stores and on the radio without delay. It should be available in about two weeks.

Yankovic said "the ultimate" would be for My Bologna to make it to number "99" on the Billboard charts. But he added he is sensitive and easily disappointed so he doesn't want to get his hopes up. He said he'll probably make it big then drop into oblivion, but it will be something he can tell his grandchildren.

Yankovic said he is receiving an advance from Capitol and then royalties on each single sold. He won't say how much, but said it is all going in his savings.

Yankovic said he is an overnight success and he doesn't feel like he has "paid his dues" yet; it's enough for him to sit and work in design lab and know that his song is being played all over the country.

Stolen art recovered

Two Rose Parade exhibits stolen from the Art Department Vestibule Gallery were recovered Friday morning.

The recovered exhibits—now back on display in the gallery—include a painting by Art Professor Robert Reynolds of the 1977 Rose Parade float "Grin and Bear It" and a print of Reynold's painting of the 1978 float "Cub O' War."

Three young men brought them in and met with the chairman of the department and said they found them in the bushes," said Art Professor Christina Orr-Cahall, organizer of the Rose Float display.

Orr-Cahall closed the Rose Float display on Thursday when the second theft was discovered, but reopened it Friday when the works of art were recovered.

"We have tried to tighten our security," Orr-Cahall said. "We really hope the community pulls together and doesn't take any more of our things," she said.

Campus Police Officer Ron Larsen said the thefts are being investigated. "I personally feel that it was through the efforts of the Mustang Daily the art was returned," Larsen said.

He said the art was recovered an hour and a half after the Friday edition was distributed with an article reporting the theft.

Larsen said individuals who took the art from the gallery probably felt guilty after reading the article, so placed it in the bushes.

The display—scheduled to run through Jan. 23—is sponsored by Orr-Cahall's exhibition and display class.

A power play

Last week's decision by the CSUC Board of Trustees to allow students as non-voting members on retention, promotion and tenure committees was a sneaky move to skirt an issue.

The move appears to give students more power and a say in faculty affairs, but actually keeps students in a powerless position.

By a vote of 7-5, the trustees gave students throughout the CSUC system the option of sitting on RPT committees. Students can listen, contribute and give input to the faculty decisions on RPT, but they have no voting power.

A decision like this is like giving a baby a lollipop and telling him not eat it. The board has compromised the students by saying "Yes, we want to know your opinions, we will consider your ideas—but not too seriously."

The trustees decision went against the statewide Academic Senate which recommended students not to be allowed on RPT committees in either a voting or not voting capacity.

Although the trustees' decision was in direct opposition to the Academic Senate, it will probably cause little friction. The board took the easy way out—they pleased the faculty somewhat by giving students no power and pleased the students by apparently giving them more pull than they had before. The long range results will leave students more frustrated with an ex officio capacity on RPT committees and leave faculty members in the same position as before—holding the cat in the bag.

To qualify its action, the board said it did not give students voting rights because the new system must be tried and tested first. But how will students remain truly interested in the committees when they have no real strength—when all they can do is talk instead of act?

What the trustees should have done was give students a chance to vote right off the bat. This would show they actually considered students responsible adults, capable of making fair and accurate decisions.

The way things stand now will be a test of student fortitude and faculty consideration. The Board of Trustees could have made things easier by skipping the test and passing the RPT decision giving students voting rights with a little faith.

Position funding

Editor:

I would like to congratulate the Mustang Daily for their unbiased reporting this year. In my four years at Cal Poly, I have seen some of the best reporting ever come under co-editors Jay Alling and John Keller. What concerns me now is a piece appearing on the opinion page.

My complaint is with the editorial entitled "Our Student Voice" (Nov. 29). In it, the Mustang Daily editorial board stated that the ASI student senate is "drowning in a sea of its own self-importance. Instead of contemplating students needs, much of it's (sic) power is being lost to personal fights between senators."

The case used to validate this statement had nothing whatsoever to do with any personal conflicts. The issue of funding the position of ASI finance chair came and went very quickly the first time it was discussed in senate. The reason that the motion was passed for the line-item transfer, and then voided, was that the process was not researched properly. The funding of the finance chair was a major policy decision. A simple motion would not have been adequate to achieve such an end. It was for that reason that a bill was in order to fund the position. If more discussion and investigation, and not less, went on in the initial phases, these "unreliable" decisions would not have occurred.

On many issues this year, there have been directly opposing viewpoints. To blame these viewpoints on personal conflicts is not only childish, but it skirts the problem entirely. Is the senate supposed to walk blindly into oblivion under the direction of any one person? Are we not to question any policy or decision without fear of attack as being mercenaries against our fellow senators and officers?

Finally, I disagree with the Mustang Daily editorial board that the student senate is the "one recognized method of asserting our influence." The Mustang Daily also has that power. That voice, though, will only be considered reliable when opinion is based on unbiased and responsible reporting.

Terrie Elikor

Editor's note: In the editorial "Our student voice," there is no such reference to the student senate as the "one recognized method of asserting our influence." What was said was that ASI is the "only official link to President Warren Baker."

Mother Jones

Editor:

Fall Quarter has seen a change in the Mustang Daily as compared to the 78-79 school year and this was welcomed as last years' edition was truly dismal. Early this quarter I noticed a definite improvement in such mechanics as spelling, sentence structure, story continuity, and simple coherency. However, it appears that not all changes have been directed toward journalistic excellence.

There has been a wave of poorly done "investigative reports". Examples include the highly refuted Health Center-radiation-hazard story and the asinine uncovering of "drug abuse" in the School of Architecture. I wondered how the editorial and writing staff of the proud Mustang Daily could sink so low into the slime of sensationalistic muckraking after showing such promise at the start of the year. Now with the latest "expose", that of the Hunger Project, the truth comes to light. It seems that the staff of the Mustang Daily is using Mother Jones magazine as an example of good investigative reporting. (Mother Jones?? They can't be serious.) That is like using Hustler magazine as an example of good taste!

If the Mustang is to continue in this vein of journalism I suggest that the name of the paper be changed to something more appropriate and propose The Poly Lampoon.

Governmental puppet

Editor:

The editorial "Governmental Puppet" (Mustang Daily, Friday, Nov. 30) questioned the appropriateness of allowing INS interviewers and other government officials to use campus facilities. I now look forward to an editorial condemning the university administration for allowing interviewers from private industry and governmental agencies the use of campus facilities for job interviews.

To paraphrase the editorial, why should we act as puppets to do a potential employer's job? I suspect that at this point, your commitment to principle would be as ephemeral as your commitment to writing well thought out editorials.

Autocross

Editor:

In an article in Friday's "Mustang Daily" publicizing Cal Poly Sports Car Club's (C.P.S.C.C.) Autocross, it was stated that it was our third annual autocross and that the purpose of an autocross is to determine the best driver on campus. We appreciate the publicity but would like to set the record straight.

The Sports Car Club has been sponsoring autocrosses since 1959 and currently holds eight a year, of which this was this year's third autocross. The purpose of an autocross is to: improve driving skill, provide a safe and legal place to learn car control, familiarize a driver to a car, and provide an enjoyable form of competition. Unfortunately we do not have the ability to determine the school's best driver.

Editor's note: The article in the Thurs. Nov. 29 issue of Mustang Daily concerning the validity of The Hunger Project relied heavily on research from Mother Jones Magazine. Left out of the article was the fact that the initial research for the Mother Jones piece was done by the Center for Investigative Reporting in Oakland. The material was then written up by freelancer Susan Gordon to be published in the magazine. The editors stand by the accuracy of the story.

Ninety minutes with Nixon

I grew up in Southern California, specifically Orange County. It was pleasant living in Orange County, but then everything seemed pleasant to me when I was seven years old. Back in 1964 Orange County could be called rural compared to what it looks like today. There were a lot of trees, open land, and horses being ridden along the road.

In fact my family's home was on a street without any curbs. There was just plain brown earth between the pavement and our front yard. This fact impressed visitors tremendously (everyone had curbs and sidewalks).

But my experience at seven years old were not isolated to suburban Southern California and non-curbed streets. I was a frequent visitor to the big city some 60 miles away called Los Angeles. About once a month my mother would take me to downtown Los Angeles and drop me off at my grandmothers apartment for the weekend (I was never sure if there was a hidden motive for my stays at grandmothers). Grandmother, a very warm and intellectual woman, showed me much of Los Angeles and told me of its history. One thing I remember most of my stays with grandmother was watching television. She always circled in the TV guide the shows she planned to watch that evening.

There is one show in particular that I remember she would never miss. That was the 6:00 news on KNXT (channel 2) with Jerry Dunphy. I can to this day still remember watching Dunphy, with his flowing white hair, talk about things I had never heard of, or wanted to at seven years of age. Because my grandmother respected Dunphy, so did I.

I lost track of Dunphy when I didn't visit my grandmother. I suppose I thought he was only on her television set. Several years later when I was more interested in Pop Warner Football and "messin' around with the guys" I totally lost track of all news and newscasters.

During that period of time Dunphy moved from KNXT, one of the most highly rated news stations at the time, to KABC and "Eyewitness News."

"Eyewitness News" is a newscast in which the amount of feature stories or soft news, out-rate hard news stories two-to-one. Knowing this, and watching Dunphy become nothing more than a reader of the news, saddened me a great deal. I lost more respect for the man as I grew and learned more about broadcast journalism.

But I was told by some people in the business that Dunphy was a good newsman, and just wasn't able to prove it at KABC.

Well, Dunphy got that chance, in my eyes, on a Monday evening Nov. 19. On that Monday Dunphy had 90 "live" minutes with former President Richard Nixon. I expected to see Dunphy shine as an interviewer and hopefully a broadcast journalist.

What I saw was 90 minutes of what could be called "Richard Nixon Propaganda." The 90 minutes were allowed to Nixon to spread his ideas on current world situations; the Iranian crisis, the Mid East, South Africa. This was not an interview. It was Nixon sitting with a man that would ask him any question that would further expose Nixon's doctrines.

I was appalled with Dunphy's "performance."

Dunphy served as a sieve for Nixon's thoughts, nothing more. The entire 90 minutes was reminiscent of one of Nixon's longer televised speeches.

Yes, Nixon does have a lot of background in foreign affairs, but if his ideas were in great need the State Department would be in constant contact with the man. It's doubtful that is taking place.

In his closing remarks Nixon said his future role will be to "provide some guidance and advice...on foreign policy." That guidance and advice also started a coverup of one of the most degrading national crimes.

As bad as ABC's new series "240 Robert" is, it's doubtful that the Nixon interview got KABC better ratings.

At the end of the broadcast Nixon began plugging a new book "that is coming out in May." In fact this excuse of an interview was topped off by Nixon telling Dunphy "I'll give you an autographed copy, so you won't have to go out and buy it."

It is hard to fathom why KABC could allow such a program on the air, and more unbelievable that Dunphy played the game.

Maybe what the critics say about television news is true at many stations in the country. That is, that broadcasters don't do a good job covering the news.

Fall graduation: A shuffle of papers, then it's adios

The time for graduation festivities is traditionally in early June. That's when the robed "degree candidates" line up and waltz into the campus stadium—some with tears in their eyes, some with smirks on their faces and others in drunken stupors. For them, it's the end of the proverbial long road, the culmination of being "physically, strong, mentally awake and morally straight."

But not all students graduate in June. Several hundred graduate each quarter, most with no more fanfare than a shuffle of papers and a cold one at the local bar. Then, it's throw the old stereo and books into the car and hit the streets peddling a 12 by 14 inch piece of parchment. There are a few parties, no caps and gowns and no "Have a nice summer"s. But if you listen closely at the end of this quarter, you'll hear a celebration of sorts.

I'm one of those who will sneak through the guard this quarter. And while I look back on my four years at Cal Poly with fond memories and warm feelings, the real fire inside burns for a chance at The World.

One doesn't go through the process of graduation without a sense of reflection. It is a melancholy, almost unpleasant look back at what the "what ifs" we had a few years ago. And it is surely an examination of the "what nows" that stretch before us.

It is a time for introspection, for sure, but thoughts must be focused on the future.

Graduation prompts a remembrance of former ASI President Larry Robinson's speech last June at the graduation ceremony: "You can fool all of the professors some of the time and some of the professors all of the time, but you can't even fool the evaluations office." Robinson's comments were intended as nothing more than a stab at a cute joke, but they wring true.

In the era of tighter admissions standard to this university, because of its enormous—and deserved—popularity, getting into this college is almost as difficult as getting out of it. But a good spar with the folks in the Evaluations Office awaits many of you who will pass through the gates of learning. My relationship with the Evaluations Office was less than painless and smooth, and the halls of the Administration Building ring with horror stories of past battles.

For many who graduate, the real glory comes when the mailman brings a package to their door labeled: "Diploma—Do Not Bend."

That could be called the Sentimentalists Approach, I guess, because it is the moment of receiving the award that reaps the greatest honor. But give me the Realists' approach. When my final exam hits the professor's desk as I walk out of the classroom, my fist will clench and I'll be anxious to spot someone I know just to tell them the news. "That's it buddy, I'm outa here."

Climbing offers failures and rewards

BY BOB BERGER
Daily Staff Writer

As my feet hit the icy apartment floor they seemed to ask me "why?". It would be a day of those questions.

John Larrick, a 21-year-old political science major, and I were going to take in a morning of rock climbing before classes. I could think of many other places that I'd rather be, like in my warm, rumpled bed that seemed to wink as the door slammed.

We were in training. Sometime in the next two weeks John and I would be standing on top of a 13,000 foot peak deep in the central Sierra Nevada.

Today we were headed for Bishop's Peak, the mountain west of campus with the "P" on its side. The routes we planned to try were technical, fifth class (5.0), and required rope-work, unlike the walls of Mission San Luis Obispo.

John (J.L.) has been climbing since he was 17. His experience and common sense make him the natural leader of the team. J.L. has been to the top of two 14,000-foot mountains in California. He has also climbed in Joshua Tree National Monument, Tahquitz, Suicide, The Needles, Tuolumne Meadows, the Pinnacles and Yosemite.

"Ahgg, foot don't slip. There, much better hold. Nice view. Fall colors are out. That sun is warm. My hands are sweaty. OK, now reach for that hand hold. Can't. Stretch. Losing my footing. Got it. Ya man. Cake from here."

In climbing there are no undeserved triumphs. It's more than a sport. For those irresistibly drawn to it, it's a way of life. There are always dazzling young climbers nipping at the heels of those who have gone before.

"Whew, tired. Rest on the rope. No, bad ethics. Keep moving. Warm wind. Feels nice."

Climbing has no referees. The champions are chosen through selection. They are singled out in the minds of others through a confusion of respect and envy. The Champions are chosen, in part, because of their accomplishments and their personalities.

The summit isn't won in a single day. The glory belongs only to those who have earned it—usually over a period of time.

Time ran short as it usually does when we're climbing. The second route took a back seat to my Urban Sociology class.

The walk back to the car was full of talk about the climb, other routes and the up-coming climb with the Outings club. The ear to ear grins were the sign of a good climb. Accomplishment. Success.

Mustang Daily—Bill Gutoff

Hawks, owls and falcons are center of interest

Student finds raptor rehabilitation a labor of love

Mustang Daily—Shirley Howell

Cal Poly student Bob Neumann showing affection towards one of several hawks he cares for.

BY DOUG HUCKINS

Daily Outdoor Writer

For 10 years Bob Neumann's feathered friends have been teaching him that there is no such thing as a 'peaceable kingdom' in nature.

At an age when most young men concentrate on pursuing girls, Bob was also chasing cottontail rabbits in industrial areas adjacent to southern California's Dominguez Hills with a kestrel, commonly known throughout the U.S. as a sparrow hawk.

Neumann's fascination with falcons, hawks, eagles and owls—birds of prey—was kindled when he watched a black-billed magpie walk nonchalantly into the midst of a feeding flock of sparrows and calmly strike out and kill one of the small birds.

Because he is an avid reader who has acquainted himself with wildlife ranging from dinosaurs to reptiles, snakes and birds of prey—as evidenced by pictures of sharks on his kitchen walls and natural history magazines on his living room table—Bob's knowledge of birds, even referring to them casually by their Latin genus and species, is astounding.

The 26-year-old Los Osos resident, a senior biological science major from Long Beach, has also developed side interests in bird and raptor rehabilitation. This was an offshoot of his interest in the centuries-old sport of falconry.

Bob cares for several types of raptors (birds of prey) in individual 'mews'—hawk houses—at his home. The first one he introduced me to was an exotic import from India, a changeable hawk-eagle. He purchased the bird over nine years ago from an animal dealer in southern California when it was still a fledgling. Falconers call the young birds 'eyass' (I-ess), meaning a young hawk, falcon or owl that has just left its eyrie (nest).

According to Neumann, most of the terminology used among falconers originated several thousand years ago in the Orient, where the sport was first practiced. It became popular in England during medieval times and migrated to the U.S. during the early 20th century. California and New York hosted some of the first falconry clubs in America during the 1920's, but today Colorado is the heart of American falconry. The national headquarters for the North American Falconers Association is also located there.

In spite of the fact that some well-known nature groups, such as the Audubon Society and Sierra Club, have waged anti-falconry battles in the past with falconers groups like the California Hawking Club, virtually all advances in the study of birds of prey have occurred as a direct result of interaction between falconers and their birds, said Neumann. Much has been learned about captive breeding practices and parasitology through individual study by the people who, like Bob, love not only the sport of falconry, but also the birds.

Neumann has done a lot of hunting with his hawk-eagle, a large blue-black bird not completely unlike the golden eagle he has in a mew at home with a red-shouldered hawk. The slightly crested feathers on top of the head lend to its aggressive, sharp-eyed demeanor. The bird is high-strung, as are most raptors, and behaved somewhat nervously when I appeared next to Bob.

"Nervousness among strangers is common with raptors," said Bob.

"A bird hunting near an industrial area would be more comfortable in the presence of a large crane reaching up into its flight path than of a stranger on the ground near its trainer," he said.

While I watched the bird, which was attached to a ground perch via a long leather thong, Bob threw a live white mouse at its feet. Although it eyed the mouse with much interest, the bird made no move until Bob approached, picked up the mouse and tossed it in the air for the bird to grip in its sharp talons. As the bird ate its prey, Bob explained how raptors feed:

"Some raptors will soar, while others would rather still-hunt, which means they wait until some form of prey goes past and then pursue it. All raptors are carnivorous and can only exist by killing birds and animals. Their diet varies from insects to rabbits and even coyotes," he said.

The hawk-eagle for example, has grasped and taken a few tumbles with jackrabbits, but prefers cottontails and lesser-sized mammals.

Kestrels are small hawks commonly seen in the San Luis Obispo area. They are easily identified as they hover over a field while looking for mice, rodents and insects. Only occasionally do they kill another bird.

White-tailed kites, sea gull-looking birds about the size of a crow, hover or dip and dive, sometimes all the way to the ground in pursuit of prey.

Red-tailed and red-shouldered hawks both very common in the country, are attracted by movement and will strike any target of opportunity. The red-tailed hawk in particular, a large bird, can frequently be seen searching for food or perched on fence posts in fields near the intersection of Foothill Blvd. and Los Osos Valley Rd.

Mission Santa's job more than ho, ho, ho

On a warm afternoon a young minister-to-be and his wife sit for hours in a makeshift cottage in the middle of downtown San Luis Obispo, giving away candy canes and trying to make confused toddlers smile before an instant camera. But the youngsters often cry and drool.

It's Christmas-time for Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus.

This year the San Luis Obispo Jaycees picked soft-spoken Gary O'Donnell of Santa Barbara.

"I like kids," says O'Donnell, who's been a San Luis Obispoan since July. "I like to bring happiness to 'em."

O'Donnell's been Santa before.

"I'm a second-generation

Santa Claus," boasts O'Donnell. "My uncle did it. My dad did it."

Two seasons ago O'Donnell was Santa Claus to Riverside youngsters at a McDonald's restaurant. Later on he married his wife, Kathleen, and now the two are expecting their first child.

O'Donnell, a drug abuse counselor, aspires to be a minister in the Assembly of God. He bellows a hearty "Ho Ho!" to passersby outside his little wooden shack. Snow is nowhere to be found and the only thing remotely resembling a reindeer is a trophy in the Elk's Lodge.

O'Donnell says people of all ages pop in to say hello or to be photographed sitting on Santa's knee, including "a lot of cruisers." Suddenly, in the midst of a Mustang Daily interview, a pair of voices are heard from without.

"You want a beer?" shouts one of the voices to O'Donnell, to which the other voice retorts: "Santa doesn't drink beer! He drinks hot chocolate!"

Clearly nothing fazes Santa, not even Cal Poly students.

Kathleen, who describes herself as "Santa's helper," photographs the spirited with Santa for $1.50. Tacked to the walls of Santa's shack are Christmas lists scribbled in crayon by starry-eyed toddlers.

Items such as toy telephones, shoe skates and various dolls like Dr. Drill and Fill and Mr. Pass Back were typical among requests, says Santa.

"They (girls) want these microwave ovens, you know the toy ones. The big toy this year is the 'Call Me Back Telephone.' And the boys, they want these Star Wars figures, and these Cobra Big Wheels."

Toys were simpler when O'Donnell was a boy.

"All they had were skates and bikes. Now the bicycles aren't the same anymore. They have those dirt bikes."

"But Santa's mission—and Gary O'Donnell's mission—is clear. O'Donnell, who'll be in the Plaza until Christmas eve, says he'll be back next season as well.

"It's the neatest thing to do."

Criticism of '60 Minutes'

An October 14 airing of CBS's 60 Minutes, regarding the recent acquisition of low interest government disaster loans by various Central Valley farming institutions, has resulted in mass criticism and anger from many Americans—farmers and non-farmers alike.

Television reporter Morley Safer in reporting on only a few farmers of various farm sizes and dimensions, distorted the true facts and occurrences of actual farming operations and completely misled the viewing audience.

60 Minutes with its usual sensational style of reporting neglected to dig deep into the true situation, while picturing only what they felt to be important.

The government low interest disaster program is sponsored by the Farmers

Home Administration (FHA) and was created to assist farmers stricken by drought, rain, wind and other natural occurring disasters.

The years 1975 through 1977 brought a severe drought to Western United States, but the winter of 1978 followed with drenching rains restricting farmer's access to their fields. That same year the central San Joaquin Valley cotton crop

Author Matthew Etcheverry is a senior journalism major and Mustang Daily Ag Writer was devastated by an influx of insects because of heavy rains.

In 1979 a tremendous wind storm added to the already overburdened farmer. As result, many farmers and ranchers suffered drastically in one form or another from the force of mother nature.

California farmers suffered the worst economic conditions since the 1930s. San Joaquin Valley farmers were particularly hurt by the storms.

Many farmers and ranchers have lost considerable sums of money much of which originated through banks and other lending institutions. These outstanding debts could no longer be repayed through conventional means. In many cases the only way loans could be replaced was through the government, via the FHA. These loans ranging in some cases from a low as $50,000 to as much as $30,000,000 can be obtained with interest as low as 5 percent with as much as 40 years to pay.

Commentary

The Federal Government, foreseeing the possible repercussions of this pending disaster, appropriated the loan program "through hasty means," according to Safer.

In Safer's report, four big Central Valley farmers received large amounts of loan money for their farms, but at the same time were living, "plush and high on the hog" through wealth accumulated by other non-farm assets. These farmers, by government standards and criteria, were legally eligible for the loans.

Other smaller-scale farmers interviewed on the program, stated unfair practice by the government and claimed that larger farmers are actually ineligible for the loans. These smaller farmers just did not meet up to the above criteria.

As a result, animosities have arisen between farmers of the Central Valley and among people of the country

What the future holds for the government farm loans is unclear. In Safer's report on 60 Minutes, the situation was labeled "Grapes of Wealth," but if these loans were not made more possible to farmers, the repercussions that would be felt throughout the nation's economy would be devastating. Not only to farmers but consumers as well. These are not the "Grapes of Wealth" for farmers but rather the Seeds of Destruction for everyone.

Farm Week celebrated at Madonna

BY DEBORAH TUCKER

Daily Staff Writer

A crowd gathered at Madonna Plaza to celebrate Farm City Week on Saturday, Nov. 17, and many participated in the day's events, which included contests, displays and demonstrations.

"This has been the biggest turnout (of clubs) so far," said Bruce Pril, Chairman for the School of Agriculture for Farm City Week. Twenty-two clubs were involved with Farm City Week, he said.

Farm City Week has a Farm Olympics portion of the program in which members of agricultural clubs participated in such events as an egg toss pickup push, cowchip toss, nail driving contest, egg gathering, milk chugging and a sack race in which a relay team carried burlap bags half-filled with sand.

Most of the members of the Farm Olympics seemed to be enjoying themselves.

"I think that it was more fun for the students than it was for the public," said Kay Altheuser, member of the Cutting and Reigning club at Cal Poly. "We had a lot of fun," she said.

The cowchip toss was possibly the most original event and the one attracting the largest crowd of onlookers. But some complained that the cowchips were not heavy enough for tossing.

Another interesting event was the "milk chugging contest." Milk was not "chugged," but drunk with a straw.

There were other programs besides the Farm Olympics at the Farm City Week celebration. Most of the clubs had exhibits and displays explaining club happenings and agricultural processes.

These displays were judged on a scale of "excellent," "very good," "fair" and "good." Collegiate Future Farmers of America won an excellent rating for their "petting zoo" which enabled people to be near and touch small farm animals.

The ornamental horticulture club earned an excellent rating for its display entitled, "Winterizing your Garden" in which the process was explained to interested persons.

The Rodeo Club received the final award for excellence for its demonstration of rodeo events. The club members explained and

The dairy manufacturing students, with the last day of finals, will accelerate the pace in the final stages of the project.

Most of the promotional work and arrangements for buying and packaging the cheese is already taken care of, said Mary Rumiano, a member of the class. The next step is to have 7,000 pounds of cheese cut down from 20-pound blocks to eight-ounce sticks.

Rumiano said the three and a half tons of Cal Poly cheese purchased for the project will be cut and wrapped at a plant near Redding, California which is owned by her family. Probably sometime this week, she said, the cheese will have to be transported up there.

It was decided to have the cheese cut and wrapped outside Cal Poly because, said project advisor Carl Moy, "We don't have the facilities for cutting and wrapping here on a large scale."

The cheese to be used in the gift boxes was produced and aged at the Cal Poly dairy plant, Moy said. It is being purchased from the Cal Poly Foundation which operates the plant.

Dawn Stead, a dairy manufacturing junior, said "Most of us on the Poly Pak project work in the plant anyway so we had something to do with making the cheese."

Moy said the project is being carried out on a larger scale than at any time since it was first done seven or eight years ago.

The enterprise is big out of necessity, said Dawn Stead, a member of the class. The students have to pay for a trip taken in the second week of November to a dairy products exposition in Chicago.

Said Moy, "We would

Mustang Daily—Jay Holm

Students in the Poly Pak enterprise project stand by cheese to be packed in gift boxes. Sale of the gift packs will pay for a trip the class took.

hope to sell in the area of 1,000 boxes."

Toward this goal the students sent out more than 8,000 brochures describing the gift packs. The leaflets, designed by class member Gary DeParis, were sent primarily to Cal Poly alumni, dairy industry persons and people with an interest in Cal Poly, Moy said.

Rodeoers on top

Cal Poly's men's rodeo team has seized a first place position in the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association by winning its third rodeo of the season hosted by the University of Arizona Nov. 2-4.

Cal Poly chalked-up 355 points to down defending regional champ Hartnell, who scored 330, and third place finisher Central Arizona College with 105 points.

John Jones, a sophomore from Morro Bay, scored 170 points and won the all-around title with his first place finish in steer wrestling and second place finish in calf roping.

After three rodeos, Cal Poly leads with 909.5 points, followed by Hartnell with 814, and Central Arizona College with 732.5.

In the women's competition, Lily Varian was the single Cal Poly entry to place.

Both men's and women's teams will have their next competition Dec. 8 and 9 at Arizona State University.

USDA to conduct Fresno meeting

BY LIZ HALEMEIER

Special to the Daily

Agriculturalists and consumers will have the opportunity next week to suggest changes in economic and social issues affecting American agriculture.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is sponsoring a series of meetings held throughout the country soliciting public comments on American rural life in order to reorganize national policies and programs to better the agriculture industry.

Two meetings will be held next week in the Western U.S. The first meeting will be held in Spokane, Washington on Dec. 12 and the second meeting will be held at the Sheraton Inn in Fresno, California on Dec. 13. Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland will preside at each meeting, which will begin at 9 a.m. and adjourn at 5 p.m.

Bergland listed 12 areas of major concern to be discussed at the meetings: Land ownership, control and tenancy; barriers to entering and leaving farming; production efficiency, size of farms and the role of technology; government programs; tax and credit policies; farm input supply systems; farm product marketing system; present and future energy supplies; environmental concerns, including conservation and use of soil and water; returns to farmers; costs to consumers; and quality of life in rural areas.

Bergland said the USDA wants to know how these 12 concerns have affected local farms and communities and what changes in public policy might be needed in the future.

"Our immediate goal is to collect and evaluate all the information we can about the current structure of agriculture and the forces that affect it," Bergland said. "It's important that we get as much public input as possible, so we can set-up new policies and programs that will best promote the kind of agriculture and rural life Americans want for the future."

The agenda for each meeting will include statements by pre-scheduled speakers, as well as time for comments and questions from the audience. Those persons who wish to speak at the meetings should send requests to: Project Coordinator, Structure of Agriculture, USDA, Washington, D.C., 20250.

Tin can extinction

Instructor predicts plastic product

BY LORI ANDERSON

Daily Staff Writer

Grocery store shoppers may soon be noticing that food is no longer from a can, it's in the bag.

That's the opinion of Dr. Robert Noyes, food science instructor of Cal Poly.

Dr. Noyes said, for the past 15 years, the Army research lab in Massachusetts has been studying the quality and safety of a retortable pouch as a container for food.

The pouch, which is made of aluminum and two layers of plastic laminated together, would replace the tin can as a container for food, said Noyes, who researched the retortable pouch at the Pentagon this past summer at the Army Research Lab in Massachusetts.

The main theory behind the retortable pouch is "to provide a better product with reduced cost," Noyes said.

Noyes said, besides the obvious advantages of being lightweight, flat and flexible, the pouch, in comparison to the can, has various other beneficial aspects.

Due to a shorter process time, the quality and taste of the packaged food is better in the pouch, said Noyes. Process time for the retortable pouch is 30-50 percent less than the process time for the can, he said.

Noyes also said the pouch has equal or better "shelf life" and is easy to prepare, clean-up and dispose.

The retortable pouch was used by astronauts in space travel, but was not approved for commercial use or wide consumption in the United States until May of 1979 when the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration gave the go ahead.

With this approval, the Army now has plans to replace the "C" ration—the canned supplies a soldier is given under combat conditions—with food in a retortable pouch, said Noyes.

He said he was asked by the government to evaluate the "phase-in, phase-out" program in which the Meal Ready to Eat (MRE) or retortable pouch would replace the "C" ration.

Noyes said the MRE would lighten the load of the soldier, increase his unrestricted ability to move and give him more of a food variety.

One of the 12 sample menus: meatballs in barbeque sauce, potato patties, chocolate nut cake, jelly, crackers, and cocoa beverage powder.

Noyes said the work he did at the Pentagon was a technological study of the feasibility of the phase-in, phase-out program.

If companies are able to produce at the level they say they can the system will be successful, he said.

demonstrated the action of rodeo and the competitive events, such as barrel racing and breakaway.

The event was successful, according to West.

"Despite the on again, off again weather (rain), it was excellent. Twenty-two out of thirty three clubs participated. Two-thirds is real fine participation," he said.

"The crowd kind of came with the rain," said Bruce Pril, Chairman from the School of Agriculture for Farm City Week.

Both West and Pril agreed that the local merchants downtown and at Madonna Plaza were supportive of the day's events.

"The Merchant's Association at Madonna and in town had excellent cooperation," West said.

Farm City Week is a national event which begins the first week before Thanksgiving and ends Thanksgiving Day. The event has been observed at Cal Poly for at least 20 years, according to West.

"I've participated in it for 12 years and it has been going on here for at least twenty and possibly twenty-five years," he said.

West said that the main purpose of observing Farm City Week is to make the average person more aware of agriculture.

"The overriding purpose of Farm City Week is to relate better to the city sector. This makes a person come to appreciate more the role that agriculture plays in their life," West said.

To those observing the day's events, the purpose to those involved seemed to be to have fun.

Season open with two wins

BY BRIAN MILLER

Daily Staff Writer

As expected, Ernie Wheeler's Mustang cagers coasted to a pair of easy wins this past week-end by trouncing Stanislaus State 89-64 on Friday night, and Cal Lutheran 87-74 Saturday evening.

USC back wins the Heisman

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Heisman Trophy winner Charles White of the University of Southern California said Monday he was so nervous about the voting that he didn't sleep the night before.

"That's why I'm a little jumpy now," he said at a news conference after it was announced in New York that he had beaten Billy Sims of Oklahoma, who won the honor last year.

"This means a great achievement. It's something I'll cherish for a long time. It means I've accomplished something in four years," White said.

"I've been trying to accomplish this for four years."

He said he had not heard yet from Mike Garrett and O.J. Simpson, who were the other Trojans to win the Heisman, in 1965 and 1968.

"But I'm sure I'll hear from them, at least I hope so," he added.

White said he hopes to graduate in June with a degree in speech communications.

Cal Poly was never really challenged in either of the games. The Mustangs played most of the line-up both nights and dominated on both offense and defense.

"When we run our offense, it doesn't matter which Mustangs we use, we're gonna score," commented Wheeler.

In twelve meetings with the two clubs, the Mustangs have never lost (7-0 against Stanislaus, 5-0 against Lutheran). The closest game for either of these clubs was back in 1969, when Cal Poly defeated Stanislaus 78-79.

Friday night the Mustangs got off to a quick start against Stanislaus. Behind Rob McKone and Pete Neumann the team rattled off to a 15-4 lead. The closest the Warriors ever got was 11 points from then on.

The differences in the game seemed to be shooting percentage and rebounding. The Mustangs shot a respectable 51.2% from the floor in the first half, compared to a 44.4% by Stanislaus. But in free throws the Mustangs were at 73.3% while Stanislaus State shot a miserable 42.9%. The Warriors shot a lowly 37.1% from the floor in the game.

Rob McKone led a balanced Mustang attack with 15 points. Other men in double figures were Kent Keyser with 14, Neumann 13, and Mark Robinson with 12.

For the Warriors, they had a two-man attack that could either turn on or turn off. Harvey Marable had a game-high of 19 points, followed by Ben Watson's 18.

Overall in the game Cal Poly dominated on the boards, grabbing 57 rebounds to the Warriors 31. It was apparent the Mustangs would dominate the boards. Marable, only 6'3" was the games leading rebounder with 11, but no other Warrior had over four. Bill Tos, 6'10" center from Hanford, grabbed 10 carems, while Robinson cradled eight. McKone, Neumann, and Dave McCracken all had seven.

The low point for the Mustangs may have been the loss of Rob McKone, late in the game. He sat out Saturday night, but Wheeler hopes to have him back for Tuesday's game with Sonoma State. But Wheeler asserted he would definitely be back by December 8th, when the Mustangs travel to Hayward.

Cal Lutheran was a bit tougher in the early goings on Saturday night, cutting an early Mustang lead to 22-18 with 11:57 gone in the first half. But the game recessed for half-time with Cal Poly sitting on top 48-35, mainly due to a sizzling 66.7 field goal percentage.

Offensively for the game, Pete Neumann (once referred to by the announcer as "Randy Newman") hit on 7 of 13 from the floor and totalled 22 points. He was followed by Mark Robinson with 16, and Dave McCracken with 11.

Like Stanislaus, Cal Lutheran ran a two man offense. Don Mock led all scorers with 25, followed by Randy Peterson's 16.

Mustang point-guard Jim Schultz dished out 10 assists to lead all players. He is averaging eight in the first two games.

Injured wrestlers cut down Poly's chance for victory

BY GREGOR ROBIN
Daily Sports Editor

Injuries to two of Cal Poly's top wrestlers is the reason the Mustangs had to settle for fourth place in the Arizona State Invitational last weekend, said Coach Vaughan Hitchcock.

The tournament was filled with national powerhouses and Coach Hitchcock said the losses of Chris Cain to an elbow injury and Robert Kiddy to a knee injury hurt the Mustang's chance for a first or second place finish.

"The injuries were a real important factor in the tournament," Coach Hitchcock said. "Cain was picked up and thrown to the mat hard and his elbow was locked. It was his second match in the tourney, and he was capable of winning the tournament. I think we would have finished second."

Robert Kiddy was in a semi-final match when his knee injury occurred.

"He was being attacked and the guy drove into him and pushed him over his leg," the coach said. "He was in a position where his body was on top of his leg and it gave. It is a misfortune that this happened to these two fine athletes."

Hitchcock said it was impossible to predict at this time when Cain and Kiddy would return. Cain's injury was listed as dislocated elbow while the seriousness of Kiddy's injury is still unknown.

In the tournament 23 teams wrestled in the two day event. The University of Oklahoma placed first scoring 119½ points, while second place went to Arizona State which scored 91½ points. Minnesota edged Cal Poly out of the third spot by scoring 85½ points to the Mustangs 85½.

Cal State Bakersfield, The University of Oregon, Iowa State (second in the nation last year), UCLA, LSU and Oregon State rounded out the top ten.

In Cal Poly matches the Mustangs earned six place showings.

Swimmers qualify for nationals

BY KAREN LUDLOW
Daily Staff Writer

Three members of the men's swim team have earned themselves a trip to NCAA II Nationals.

The swimmers qualified for the nationals in the first meet of the year in what was supposed to be a tri-meet with Cal State Northridge and Occidental College. But Occidental did not show in the non-scoring meet.

Senior Bill Bischoff qualified in both the 200-yard and 500-yard freestyle events. He also broke a school record that was set in 1978 by Sean Holbrook in the 500 free. The old record stood at 4:46.15 with Bischoff setting the new record at 4:44.8. The qualifying mark is 4:46.5. He was timed at 1:46.23 for the 200-yard freestyle just surpassing the qualifying standard of 1:46.4.

Junior Steve Wright will be returning for his second nationals appearance. Wright qualified in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 55.2, beating the standard of 55.33. Wright was named as an All-American last year in that event.

Freshman Glen Perry qualified in the 200-yard butterfly by finishing the race in 1:57.00, the qualifying mark is 1:57.02. Perry missed the nationals for the 200-yard individual medley but broke a school record.

Khomeini voted in for life

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — The Iranian people, in a vast show of support for the Moslem elder who has made the holding of American hostages part of a holy crusade, voted overwhelmingly Monday to make Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini their political overlord for life.

The Khomeini regime, meanwhile, stepped up public readiness for an eventual U.S. military attack, expected by many Iranians. It posted more guards at the U.S. Embassy, where 50 Americans entered their 30th day of captivity in the hands of Moslem militants demanding that the United States hand over the deposed Shah of Iran.

Permits

"Last spring when we knew this was coming up we did a traffic count in the area," said Gerard.

The University Police counted cars parked in the area on weekdays and weekends, said Gerard.

"The city police also conducted their own investigation. As a result," said Gerard, "two hundred cars were logically identified as belonging to the university."

Gerard said "G" parking lots adjacent to Grand Avenue, across the street from the dormitories are seldom filled. At fall registration, parking permits for those lots were not sold out.

Ohm I

THE GOOD AND LOUD LOUD SPEAKER

At Audio Ecstasy, trying to impress us with an efficient, omni-directional speaker is like trying to impress the Hulk with a squirt-gun. I mean we're rough on rats. With speakers like the Vandersteen II and KEF 105 as references, most speakers just don't cut it.

Well, at Audio Ecstasy we have a new speaker that laterally blew us away. The OHM I (that's OHM EYE) is a staggering achievement in an ACCURATE LOUD speaker design. It can be driven with as little as 10 watts or handle 1000 watts for sound pressure levels of up to 125 dB! ... and Jack, that's a clean, accurate 125 dB. Try that with any of those huge horn loaded boxes designed in the stone age.

If the punch of high energy rock or the awesomeness of an organ recital at concert hall levels thrills you, the OHM I will drop your jaw. At $1350 a pair, they're not cheap but, the best things in life aren't.
